
塞翁失马焉知非福

Blessing in Disguise

Story behind this proverb to make sense of it:

An old man's horse runs away from him. His neighbors say: 'What bad luck'. The old man says: 'maybe'. A few days later the horse returns, but alongside a few wild horses. His neighbors say: 'What good luck. You now own more horses. The old man says: 'maybe'. His son rides one of the horses but falls and breaks his leg. His neighbors say: 'Horrible luck'. The old man says: 'maybe'. All able young men are drafted to fight in war a couple days later; naturally, his son is spared from the draft. His neighbors say: 'amazing luck' The old man says: 'maybe'.

有缘千里 来相会。

(Yǒuyuán qiānlǐ lái xiānghuì)

Fate brings people together from far apart

This proverb espouses that human relationships are decreed by fate

患难见真情

(Huànnàn jiàn zhēnqíng / 'Hardship see true situation')

— In hardship, we see true friendship.

- Similar to: "A friend in need is a friend indeed."

广交友, 无深交

(Guǎng jiāoyǒu, wú shēnjiāo /
'widely make friends, no deep friendship')

Similar to: "A friend to everybody is a friend to nobody."

物理

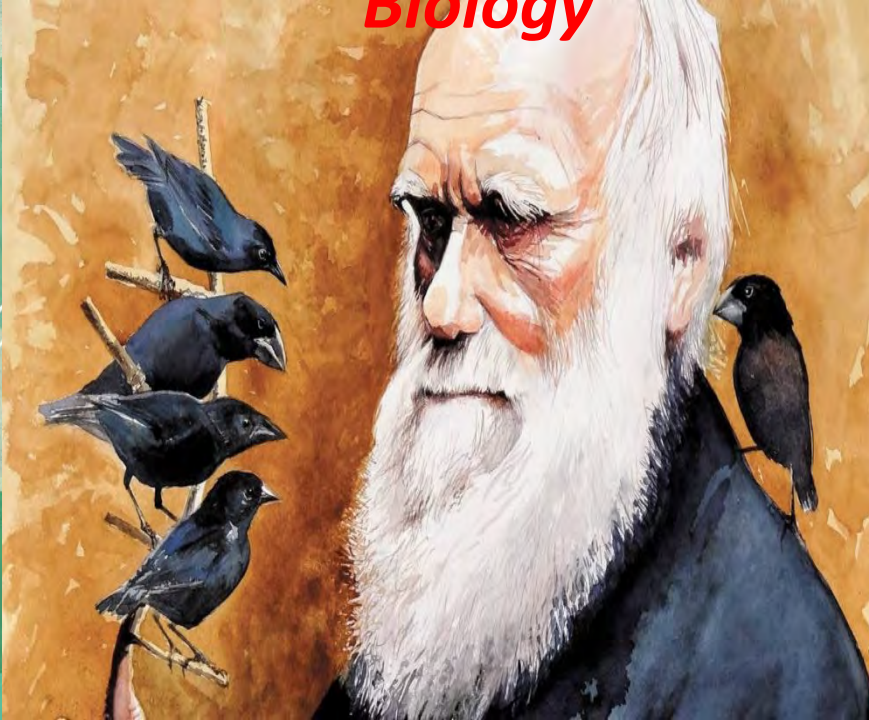

wùlǐ – Mandarin
mat6 lei5 - Cantonese
Physics

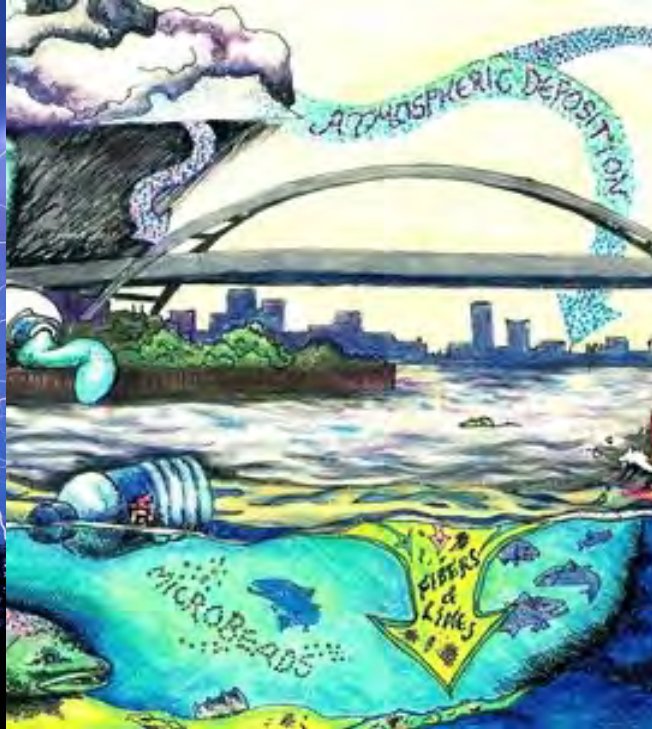

生物

Shēng wù – Mandarin
sang1 mat6 – Cantonese Biology

环境系统科学

huánjìng xìtǒng kēxué – Mandarin

waan4 ging2 hai6 tung2 fo1 hok6 – Cantonese

Environmental Systems and Societies

The Language of the Month for June is:

Chinese

你好 Nǐ hǎo Mandarin Néih hóu Cantonese

Thursday 23 June
lunchtime in the aula:

Kahoot and Chinese snacks

